Religion, Spirituality and Culture in Psychiatry:
Curriculum description:

Seattle is a multicultural city with many different forms of religious and spiritual beliefs being practiced. These beliefs and practices have clinical relevance, especially for the assessment and management of patients’ mental health. This curriculum aims to enhance psychiatry residents’ sensitivity to and knowledge about religious, spiritual and cultural issues, so that they will better understand patients, their families and their communities. Residents will also be given the chance to discuss their own spiritual beliefs and cultural backgrounds, in order for them to be able to integrate these into their experience as a physician.
